TO THE TEACHER:

It is suggested that students be not required to keep too strictly within the sections of the list assigned to their own grades. The titles are in general suitable to the years to which they are assigned, but individual differences in students' ability to appreciate, previous reading, etc., should be allowed for. Credit should, therefore, be given for any title on the list at whatever time it is read during the four years.

Credit should also be given for other books by authors included on the list, if students wish to substitute, - for instance, other novels of Dickens, or Scott, or Stevenson. Substitution should, however, be made only on the approval of the teacher.

It is strongly advised that students be required to read from three or four of the groups. Otherwise many will read fiction exclusively and the list will partly fail in its purpose.

The aims of the list are (1) to guide students who already have a taste for reading to well written and interesting books; (2) to assist in developing a taste for reading in those who do not have it. To accomplish this second purpose it is necessary that reading be fairly constant. One book a month would, therefore, not be too much to require.

Young people are affected in their choice of books by outward appearance, and it is well to provide as attractive editions, particularly of standard works, as can be obtained at reasonable cost. Suggestions as to editions are here made for those who may wish to purchase from the titles on the list. However, the list is primarily intended for students' use, and if duplicated for them, publishers and prices had best be omitted.

It is suggested that students be not required to keep too strictly within the selection of the list assigned to their own grades. The titles are in general arranged in the order to which they are assigned, but individual differences in students' ability to appreciate, understand, and enjoy, should be allowed for. Credit should, however, be given for any title on the list at whatever time it is read during the four years.

Credit should also be given for other books by authors included on the list, if students wish to supplement. For instance, other novels of Dickens, or Scott, or Stevenson. Substitution should, however, be made only on the approval of the teacher.

It is strongly advised that students be required to read from three or four of the groups. Otherwise many will read fiction exclusively and the list will hardly tally in its purpose.

ESSAYS

In reading essays we think over again the thoughts of wise or observant men. Some of the essays on the list which follows are quite modern, like the beautiful and touching sketch of Mary White, or Kilmer's bright and interesting description of riding in the subway. Others, as for example Emerson's, are fine inspiring old standards.
